

The History of Hutto, Texas

Hutto's story begins in 1876, long before it was even an incorporated city. The town took shape when a train station stop was established along the newly completed International and Great Northern Railroad line running from Palestine to Round Rock.

That railroad stop put Hutto on the map, literally, and sparked the growth of the community that still thrives today. While Hutto wouldn't officially incorporate until 1911, those early railroad days mark the true beginning of its story.

Now for the part everyone remembers.

According to local legend, in 1915 a circus train rolled into Hutto and stopped at the old depot to take on passengers. During the pause, circus staff tended to the animals, and that's when things got interesting. Their hippopotamus decided it was done with train life, hopped off, and wandered toward Cottonwood Creek.

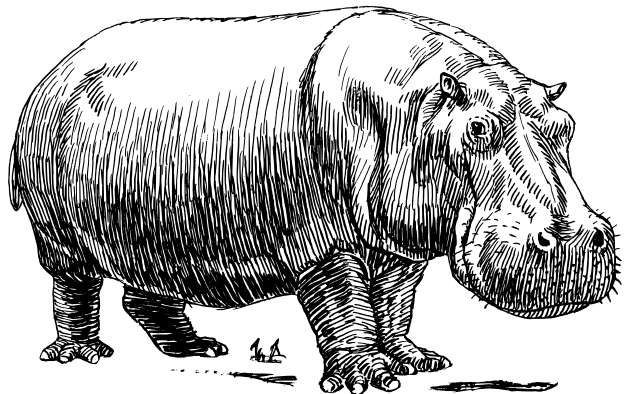

The depot agent immediately sent a telegraph to neighboring towns with a message that has gone down in Texas folklore:

“Stop trains. Hippo loose at Hutto.”

Eventually, the hippo was wrangled, loaded back onto the train, and the circus continued on its way. But Hutto? Hutto never forgot.

By 1923, the runaway hippo was still the talk of the town and even appeared on official high school graduation announcements. Not long after, the hippo was officially adopted as Hutto’s mascot, cementing its place in local history.

And as Hutto proudly says today...the rest is history.
